Vote: unanimous, 4-0/ Motion carried

Call to order:

6:20 p.m.

Mayor Smith invited members of the public to comment on property tax rates and revenues.

Cindy Radcliffe-My comment is, there are a lot of people in this city that are living, literally have dollars left after they pay their bills. To raise, or to continue to raise taxes to me is, is putting people in the hole. And that, to me that's criminal. So I would suggest that they not only not be raised, but that the one that we did raise two years ago to end. How do you guys feel about that?

Donna Rogers-I don't want to see them raised. How's that?

Steve Sweat-I'm from Longview, I'm thinking about buying a house here. So we're just, we're kinda concerned about it. Taxes are important, they're necessary to keep things moving and I know it puts a hardship on some people, so maybe they can make it like, an exception, for those who are financially challenged because, I know, I move into the community, I understand that taxes make the community or break it. I've lived in places that have just choked the life out of the city because, so.

Patty McVey-And, I've been away. I'm again considering, I was caring for my sick mother in Indianapolis and we lost her, but I was there. And that's very important. And, I want to make a comment that I'm still moving from Castle Rock. It's heaven up here compared to the taxes in Castle Rock. So I'd just like to make that comment. I find it, and I am on a limited, I'm 72 now, as Jason well knows, he has a senior menu for me. So I just want to comment that this is to me the best value in the state of Washington, California, Oregon, because I've studied it all.

Scott Gross-I feel that the city is going to be in a detriment because they don't increase the revenue (unintelligible word) flowing that isn't a good idea overall for the city. And I wasn't here for the workshop so I don't know where you guys are at number wise. But umm, if the city can't keep itself afloat based on current numbers and there isn't enough money coming in, then of course, we need to make changes. This being the most logical one because any other options aren't going to pull in the dollars that property taxes are going to, such as sales tax or (unintelligible words) someone new coming in.

Cindy Radcliffe-My comment is, just like with our own budget at home, you live within your budget, and you don't just keep trying to go out and get a 3rd and 4th or 5th job in order to bring more money in. So raising taxes shouldn't be the first thing you guys think about, it should be the very last think you think about. Stop doing that. So don't just raise taxes, cut expenses someplace else. There are several options that maybe could be left instead of just putting it on the back of the people in town that can hardly afford it.

Hallie Sword-I am too on a limited income, not, too, ya know, I'm okay, but I'm on a limited income and I know some people that have a more limited income than I do. But my question is how much is our tax burden compared to other communities and other cities? And, would the people we're trying to help by not raising the taxes, suffer greatly, if there weren't roads, maintenance, fire protection, etcetera, etcetera. I think that we have to consider, um, how we would get along with less money if, when we're back against the wall, maybe raise taxes a little. Maybe people are going to have to give up cable t.v. or you know, other things or stop buying lottery tickets or other,...there are people who are dirt poor, and I know it, and I understand. Trust me, I understand. But I think that, uh, the ideas that have been voiced here about finding out about how much other people are paying for the same thing (loud noise, could not hear speaking).

Patty McVey-I'm still a resident of Castle Rock. But you are unincorporated, right?

Jason Dailey-No, we are incorporated.

Patty McVey-Okay, so if we look at 2,500 people in Castle Rock, and then we look at your numbers and we compare, we would find out, which I've done, that we here, and I say we because, Jason knows how serious I am, and um, Judy does too, we are more than competitive in Vader. And really, I fear for cities like Castle Rock, who look beautiful, taxed out the ears, um, and even those that aren't as unlucky as some, can barely afford it. So I'm just making the comment that if you're looking at comparisons of cities, we could look at Kalama, we could look at Castle Rock, and I've done that. And this is still the very best buy, and yes we should raise and yes we should be aware of the poor, and we should give more to the poor. But I think that's up to, my comment is that that's up to each one of us through our churches and everything else to help the poor and the homeless. Which there are some always.
